Dr. Maria Tsouroufli PhD:

“I am currently a Reader in Women and Gender at the University of Wolverhampton. I specialise in interdisciplinary and international research in secondary, higher and medical education aiming to advance social justice and in particular eradicate gender stereotypes and gender discrimination. My work in the Sociology of Gender and Education has been concerned with the relationship between policy, practice and inequalities, exploring how gender inequalities are connected to subjectivities, every day practices, pedagogy, culture, institutional processes and policy. This research has spanned issues of gender, ethnicity, migration, heteronormativity, and social class, and has been underpinned by engagements with post-structural thinking about power, the subject, space, and the political.”
